You will see people using them in almost every situation. All SMGs are automatic. More suitable to close-mid range engagements. Light machine guns or LMGs have the highest ammo pool out of all other gun categories in game, but have a disadvantage of having longest reload times. All LMGs are automatic, and more suitable for close and mid ranges, but also can be used at long ranges. These are often known for their Crowd Control advantage, rendering it useful for King of the Hill.Rifles are semi automatic weapons capable of killing players in couple of shots.Rifles are made to be used at mid-long range, but can be used at close range. They have a tight spread, rendering them quite useful for first-time players. Sniper rifles are made to pick people off. Having low ROF, but highest damage per bullet, and ability to one shot anyone on headshot, sniper rifles are the best choice to kill a dangerous person at a safe distance. Snipers are the only weapons that zoom the camera slightly when ADSing. All snipers are semi automatic, and should be only used at long ranges. Shotguns are the most interesting weapon type of all. Instead of firing one bullet per shot, they fire multiple pellets instead. This forces the player to play more aggresive, and get more personal with enemies. The second and third numbers listed are torso and headshot damage respectively. Enemies die when they take damage without regenerating RPM Fire Rate is the number of bullets the weapon can fire in one minute. In other words, a higher number means a faster fire rate. Automatic weapons will continue firing as long as the fire button is held down. Burst-fire weapons will always fire a burst of multiple shots, followed by a delay, and will do so automatically as long as the fire button is held down. Semi-automatic weapons require the trigger to be pulled for each individual shot. Capacity is the number of rounds a gun can fire before needing to reload. Handling is the weapon's dexterity when it comes to combat readiness, such as draw speed and aim time. Mobility affects the player's movement speed when the weapon is equipped. This will not affect movement if another weapon is equipped. Range is the weapon's effective range. The first number is how many studs max damage will be dealt at, and the second number is the distance at which minimum damage will be dealt. Categories: Weapons. Fan Feed 1 Codes 2 Outfits 3 Weapons.
